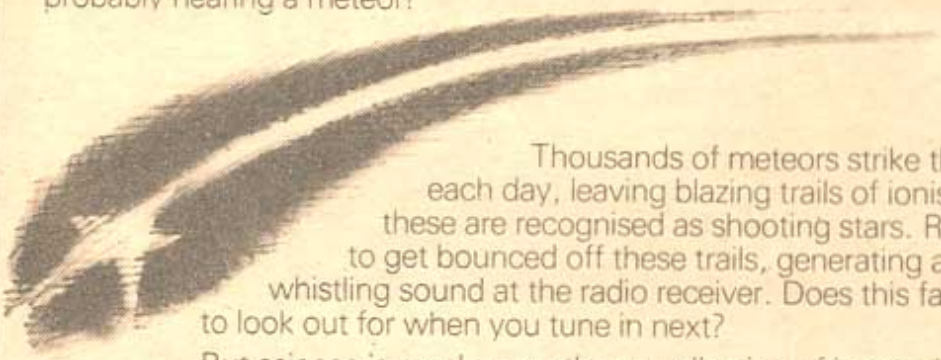
IF YOU HEAR A WHISTLE ON YOUR RADIO IT'S PROBABLY A METEOR.

Medium and shortwave listeners are often treated to sudden high pitched squeals on their favourite programmes. Would it surprise you to know, you were probably hearing a meteor?



Thousands of meteors strike the atmosphere each day, leaving blazing trails of ionised gas. At night, these are recognised as shooting stars. Radio waves tend to get bounced off these trails, generating a characteristic whistling sound at the radio receiver. Does this fact add something to look out for when you tune in next?

But science is much more than a collection of interesting oddities. And even as each new experience finds coherent explanation, technology finds ways of putting it to use... the digital watch on your hand, the microcomputer in your office, the communications satellite that brought you the last cricket test match. The science underlying these artefacts is less than three decades old!

The point is, today, no one can afford to remain a passive spectator. The price to be paid is a complete alienation with the contemporary world. Here is a magazine that brings this world to you month after month. Updating you on the latest — from molecular biology to astrophysics. It's time you began exploring this world.

Jeevan and Hanu communicate about

THOSE TALKATIVE ANIMALS

Fire ants communicate with different odours produced by special glands. A slow-fading smell marks a route to food. A quick-fading smell warns of danger. Another odour identifies a fire-ant to others in the community, and yet another calls for a 'general' meeting — without alarm.

Over 2,000 kinds of lightning bugs exist — beetles that emit different kinds of light. Special nerves switch 'on' a glowing chemical. These lights are used as 'courting' signals. Each of the 2,000 varieties has its own lighting language, avoiding confusion. The flashes also help scare away enemies.

The knife fish creates an electrical charge in surrounding water. Other knife fishes sense this charge as sound, with musical 'notes' in complex combinations and subtle rhythms. Scientists are trying to understand this puzzling musical language.

Fleas talk by sending sound waves too high for humans to hear. Small abdominal air openings narrow and widen to vary the pitch (like whistling). Sensitive hairs on the backside pick up these sounds, which usually communicate an invitation to a feast — at a newly-discovered food source.
